

Our nation needs to encourage a diversity of views in the media. Our democracy depends upon it. We now know that the Clinton Communications Act has led to a consolidation of media giants, not the increased competition promised. It's bad enough that the "public service" requirements for using the public's airwaves are meaningless. The changes in the proposed "broadcast ownership" regulations will result in yet fewer voices on the radio and tv. This is not in the public interest and should be rejected.
